

Dwayne Scheuneman was an accomplished wheelchair Track and Field athlete when in 2002 he sought out dance as a means of cross training. The physicality and the creativity of dance quickly leaped to the forefront of Dwayne's interest and he began taking dance classes and performing with Asher Dance Eclectic in Tampa FL. It was also at this time when he began taking workshops and attending dance festivals with internationally recognized "Physically Integrated" dance companies such as AXIS Dance Company, CANDOCO and others. In August of 2005, Dwayne started REVolutions dance in Tampa Florida, an inclusive dance company that creates professional performance and training opportunities for both adults and children with disabilities. Since that time, Dwayne has collaborated with choreographers and dancers around the US to create and perform in numerous dance performances. Dwayne has worked in several international collaborations as a guest teacher and performer in Russia, Palestine and Israel. In 2014, Dwayne moved to Oakland to join AXIS Dance Company with whom he continues to teach and perform.
